

THE PROSPECTOR

Investment and Exploration News

December 2006 Vol. 16, No. 6

$2.75 Cdn $2.50 US

Enriching Digs

Decreases in supply, ever-increasing oil prices and an unprecedented global demand for energy have sent uranium prices to heights not seen in more than fifty years. Right now it seems nothing is hotter. It's widely accepted that uranium is still on the move and more than just a few companies – and their investors – are going along for the ride.

The Western Front
Exploring the Land of Milk and Honey

Small Staking Rush
Waiting for Results in South America

Where's the Beef?
Expectations and Justification in Nevada

Northwestern Mineral Ventures (NWT:TSX-V) uncovers new uranium potential at the North Rae project in Quebec.

